He finally located these people the last few days of the month, or whenever, and so one of the main things of this is that when someone files a lien against you, or me, or anyone else, they have to notify you using your last known address, your social security number, and any other ID number you have. Then when that has been taken care of and paid, they have 30 days in which to file a statement that the lien has been taken care. If they do not do that within 30 days, then you would have to go court. Then there would be the possibility that you could collect court costs, or attorney fees, or whatever.
